FOR TEAM MEMBERS

Sample Team Survey

Workload, work-life balance, and fairness. About 5 minutes.

Your manager has asked for a new person on the team. Before anyone decides, the people reviewing this request want to hear from the people who do the work today. This survey is how you tell them.

How your answers are kept anonymous

- Do not write your name or anything that could identify you.
- The people reviewing this request collect the answers. Your manager does not see individual answers.
- Your manager sees only combined results, and only if enough people answer.
- Written answers are shared as themes, not word for word.

Your answers matter. If few people respond, the people reviewing this request will have less to go on and will rely more on your manager's answers.

There are no right answers. Answer for the last 3 months. Fill in one circle per row.

YOUR WORKLOAD

13	I can raise concerns about my workload without worrying how it will be seen.	◯	◯	◯	◯	◯

		Never	Rarely	Sometimes	Often	Almost always
14	How often does your manager check in about your workload?	◯	◯	◯	◯	◯

YOUR VIEW

15 A new person usually needs a few months of training, often from people on the team. Counting that time, would one more person make your workload more manageable within 6 months?

◯ Yes ◯ No ◯ Not sure

15a Within 12 months?

◯ Yes ◯ No ◯ Not sure

16 What takes more time than it should?

For example a slow tool, a step that needs approval, a repeated task, or work that could be dropped. Optional.

17 What one change would most improve how work is shared on this team?

Optional.

18 Is there anything else the people reviewing this request should know?

Optional.

Thank you. Return this the way you were asked. Do not give it to your manager.

How to run this survey

Remove this page before you send the survey to the team.

Send it yourself.
HR or the Req Approver sends the survey and collects it. Never route it through the manager who asked for the hire.

Use an online form if you can.
Handwriting can be recognized. Copy these questions into an anonymous form tool and turn off email or name collection. Use this PDF as the source.

Set a minimum number of answers.
Share results with the manager only if at least 5 people answer. On a smaller team, combine results with a nearby team or report themes only. On a team of 2 or 3, combined results still point to people.

Ask no questions about the person.
No role, tenure, location, or shift questions. On a small team these identify people.

Share themes, not quotes.
Summarize written answers in your own words. People can recognize a coworker by how they write.

Keep it open about one week.
Send one reminder to the whole team, never to one person.

Tell the team what happens next.
Say when results are shared and that no answer can cost anyone their job. Trust in the next survey depends on this one.

Reading the results

Scoring.
Score Strongly disagree as 1 and Strongly agree as 5. For the How often questions, score Never as 1 and Almost always as 5.

Questions 1 to 4, 7, and 8.
Low scores support a real workload need.

Questions 5, 6, and 9.
High scores support a real workload need.

Question 4.
High scores mean the workload is steady, which suggests the need will last. That matters for a permanent hire.

Question 8.
Low scores mean the team cannot keep up its current pace.

Questions 10 to 13.
Low fairness scores with good workload scores suggest a sharing problem a new hire may not fix.

Question 14.
A low score means the manager rarely checks workload. Compare it with what the manager wrote about how they check.

Questions 15 and 15a.
No at 6 months and Yes at 12 months is normal while a new person learns the job. No or Not sure at both suggests a new hire would not relieve the team, or that training would fall on people who are already stretched.

Question 16.
Read it next to the manager's answer about broken processes. Repeated themes may point to a fix that removes the need.

Compare with the manager's answers.
Check the survey against the manager's answers on how work is divided and how the team covers the work today. Large gaps are worth a conversation.
